

Document Sales now sells many S&B training publications

Many of the Safety and Buildings Division's training publications are now being distributed by the Document Sales unit of the state Department of Administration. The change will allow customers to use credit cards to purchase via mail, fax, telephone, or in person, and will lower the cost of the documents.

The publications are mostly plumbing code training manuals, but also include old elevator codes, and code commentaries for the Uniform Dwelling Code and Rental Weatherization. Documents Sales currently produces and sells the Comm 83 POWTS manuals, and all the state administrative codes.

Located at 202 South Thornton in Madison, Document Sales will sell: Cross Connection Control; Drain and Vent System Design; Sizing the Water Supply System; Water Treatment Handbook; old Elevator Codes, and POWTS Inspectors Handbook.

The new endeavor will be a print-on-demand service that will use electronic documents provided by S&B, while freeing up S&B storage space and staff time. The printing inventory costs will be eliminated for the division, which will no longer sell the publications. Document sales will produce and distribute the publications for less than S&B could.

You can reach the Document Sales Web site by going to the S&B site, <http://commerce.wi.gov/SB/SB-DivPublications.html>, and select "Document Sales - General Overview."

The Document Sales toll-free telephone number is 800-362-7253 (Madison local 264-9419) and the email address is docsales@doa.state.wi.us.

Fire department material orders are not affected by this change in obtaining some S&B publications. Departments will continue to use the "Fire Prevention Program Supplies Form, SBD-8009."

Is that commercial building occupancy occupied?

By J.B. Smith, S&B Commercial Buildings Program Manager

Be thoughtful when you consider commercial building occupancy.

The building codes we use are full of words and phrases that touch on a "people use it" factor. For examples: occupiable, nonoccupiable, habitable, occupied, occupancy, frequented, "intended to be occupied as a residence," "occupancy importance factor," "occupant load," "occupiable space," "designed for human occupancy," "living space," etc.

Similarity of the words or phrases does not mean there aren't variations on how they are applied when conditions differ or change. Understanding the variations can be key to the proper application of the codes and standards we use.

Someone suggested recently that because a use fits into an occupancy group, the use has to be considered "occupied" for all the other code provisions that are found throughout the code. It was even generalized that because a building or structure is a public building or place of employment it has to be considered "occupied."

Neither statement is true. It is not appropriate

Occupancy

to generalize in that manner. We should always deal with occupancy and use on a case by case and code subject by code subject basis.

Think of the general illumination of a parking garage that is not required (i.e. IBC s. 1204) and the egress illumination that is (IBC s.1003.2.11). These are different occupancy conditions that must be viewed separately. Another example is the exhaust systems that may have to exist within a building, but need not be turned on except when occupied, or in the case of an exhaust system associated with a specific process, need only be on when the process is in operation.

If you have questions or comments on applying occupancy factors in the commercial building code, feel free to contact me, Jim Smith, jsmith@commerce.state.wi.us, or 608-266-0251.

Renewal for inspectors who have an expiration after June 30, 2006, are contingent upon obtaining at least 24 hours of approved CE.

To see what CE hours S&B has recorded for your credentials, go online to http://apps.commerce.state.wi.us/SB\_Credential/SB\_CredentialApp. Enter your credential/customer ID number, and look for the search results at the bottom of the page. Then, double-click on your name. The hours shown represent CE attendance records received by S&B.
